According to the Indian law, children below the age of 14 years cannot be employed to any type of work forcefully whether by the parents or owner in factories, offices or restaurants. It is a common practice in India as well as other developing countries in the small scale industry, domestic aid, restaurant service, stone breaking, shopkeeper's assistant, every house-hold industry, book binding, etc. Most of the children under poverty line are forced to do the child labour daily even after the lots of awareness program run by the government and future welfare of society towards the welfare of the child. After the independence of the country, various laws and regulations have been implemented regarding the child labour however it did not found its end in the country. Child labour ruining the innocence of the kids by directly destroying their health physically, mentally, socially and intellectually. Millions of children have been deprived of the childhood and proper education. Children are the lovely creation of the nature and future of the country but due to the selfish motives of certain people as well as due to some unfavourable circumstances they are forced to do hard labour before their appropriate age. Child labour is a global issue which is more common in the underdeveloped countries. Poor parents or parents under poverty line are unable to afford the education expenses of their kids and they own unable to earn enough money for the family survival. So, they better choose to involve their kids in hard work to fulfil their needs instead of sending them to school. They understand that schooling is a waste of time and earning money in early age is good for their family. It is the urgent need to aware the poor people as well as rich people about the bad effects of the child labour. They must be availed with all the resources which they lack. Child labour is a big social problem which needs to be solved on urgent basis by the support of both, people (especially parents and teachers) and government. For a man of action there is much to do in the world. In spite of our progress, disease and poverty still continue to exist in our society. We have not yet discovered a satisfactory method of settling international disputes. The majority of mankind lives in dirty slums and is threatened with the prospect of starvation. Masses are still the prey of ignorance, superstition and bigotry. We have to do a lot if we really want to turn the world into a paradise. We have not been able to make satisfactory progress due to our defective social, political and economic organization. Our wise men taught us to die for our country and religion. And we thought erroneously that death was more glorious than life. But in fact, to live and work for the betterment of mankind is more glorious than a brave death. In such a world, we should always have this maxim before us : “Life is action, not contemplation.

OR

There is an enemy beneath our feet-an enemy the more deadly for its complete impartiality. It recognizes no national boundaries, no political parties. Everyone in the world is threatened by it. The enemy is the earth itself. When an earthquake strikes, the world trembles. The power of a quake is greater than anything human beings themselves can produce. But today scientists are directing a great deal of their effort into finding some way of combating earthquakes, and it is possible that sometime in the near future people will have discovered a means of protecting themselves.

An earth quake strikes without warning. When it does , its power is immense. If it strikes a modern city, the damage it causes is as great as if it has struck a primitive village. Gas main burst, explosions are caused and fires are started. Underground railways are wrecked. Whole buildings collapse, bridges fall, dams burst. Gaping crevices appear in busy streets. If the quake strikes at sea, huge tidal waves sweep inland. If it strikes in mountain regions, avalanches roar down into the valley.
