"I remember Bhulabhai Desai telling me that when he was a junior, he was once sitting in the library and making copious notes in connection with some brief which he was studying. Inverarity, who was passing by, stopped and asked him what he was doing. Bhulabhai said that he was making notes. Inverarity, took up the papers, tore them up and told Bhulabhai, "Young man, learn to trust your memory," Bhulabhai took this advice to heart, and throughout his career as a lawyer, he never made a single note, however, long and complicated the case might be I have seen him open a case full of facts and figures. Only turning over the pages of his brief and finding the right piece, all without a single note or without a single marking in his brief. He had an almost photographic memory and once he had read something in a brief or in a book, he knew exactly where it was and could find it whenever he wanted it."
